Youth Served A Term at One
Time in The Eastern State Penitentiary

DOYLESTOWN, Oct. 9.—Bucks County officials are going to confer with Ira J. Mills, of the Eastern State Penitentiary at Graterford, before disposing of the case of Walter Zacierka, 21, West Ellen street, Philadelphia. Zacierka is charged with assault with intent to rob and is alleged to have taken part in the hold-up of David Fogel and Helen Miller, who were parked in a car on Knights Road in Bensalem Township, September 18, 1938.

The youth, who has served a part of a sentence from two to five years in the Eastern State Penitentiary on a robbery charge; 14 months in the La Salle Protective in New Jersey, and 90 days for drawing a deadly weapon in a mid-western state prison, had his sentence deferred until President Judge Hiram H. Keller and Judge Calvin S. Boyer have communicated with Mr. Mills under whom the young man learned agriculture at Graterford.

The youth, who was released from the penitentiary September 26, and has been in the County Prison, here, broke down while sitting in prisoners' row.

County Detective Anthony Russo and Private Theodore W. Jones, of the South Langhorne sub-station of the P. M. P., investigated the hold-up which took place in Bucks county and was committed by three boys, one of whom was given a suspended sentence. He had been in a reformatory. The other is still awaiting sentence before the Court here after he is released from another prison.

Zacierka told President Judge Keller a revolver with "blanks" was used and that a toy revolver was also used. "I learned to value my freedom and went to school in the penitentiary for seven months," said the defendant, who assured the Court he had learned his lesson and could go straight.

"One feature about your case that I don't like is your handling guns at such an early age," commented President Judge Keller. His former employer testified the boy's home life and environment were bad.

According to a police record, the youth was involved in five serious offenses, including robbery, hold-up, drawing deadly weapons and illegal train riding.

Frank Ball, 18, Brown's Lane, Croydon, who pleaded guilty to larceny and receiving stolen goods, which included the theft of 20 gallons of gasoline and a fog horn, valued at $500, was committed to the Huntingdon Reformatory by Judge Calvin S. Boyer.

Private John P. Mitchell, of the South Langhorne sub-station of the P. M. P., arrested the youth May 15. The boy was involved in a series of thefts of gasoline and automobile parts.

Judge Boyer, deploring that the youth, who appeared here in juvenile court, broke his faith with the Court, asserted "that he had his chance but wasn't strong enough and that he must go to school longer, on the chance that he will become a good citizen."

Hospital in London Bombed
By Germans

London, Oct. 9.—While London counted 108 dead and wounded in one of the most pitiful disasters of the war—the bombing of a hospital for incurables—the German Luftwaffe and the Royal Air Force battled for supremacy in the skies over Britain's capital this afternoon.

Although air raid sirens screamed twice during the afternoon, many rooftop watchers stayed at their posts to watch the grappling planes move from area to area over the city, while RAF fighters attempted to break up the Nazi formations and anti-aircraft shells exploded in their midst.

Americans in Shanghai Cable
For More Ships

Shanghai, Oct. 9.—As American residents of Shanghai cabled Washington for sufficient ships to enable wholesale evacuation, this famous city on the Wangpoo was turned into an armed camp tonight.

Tension mounted steadily and fears of violent incidents grew, while Shanghai authorities took all possible measures to protect the foreign population from possible molestation.

The 10th of October is both a Chinese and Japanese national holiday. Observers have long feared that hot-heads might take advantage of the coincidence to touch off a riot.

All Shanghai volunteers were mobilized, police reservists called up and barbed-wire barricades erected on all except the three main thoroughfares of the city.

The appeal to Washington was sent by the American Association, composed of most of the American residents of Shanghai, upon receipt of advice from the Consulate for all U. S. citizens to leave China, Japan and Manchukuo without delay.

The U. S. gunboats Isabel and Luzon, carrying supplies for missionary hospitals at Nanking and Wuhu, steamed up river during the afternoon. It was believed they would take aboard any Americans desiring to return to Shanghai, including a number of Standard Oil employees and their families.

Meanwhile, from Hong Kong it was reported that 1,600 American residents had been advised by the Consulate to leave if they have no urgent reason for remaining.

SUPERIOR COURT
UPHOLDS DECISIONHigh Tribunal's Decision Sustains
Ruling of Bucks
County Quarter Sessions

IN THE DR. COHEN CASE

By International News Service

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 9.—By a 5-2 decision, the State Superior Court today ruled that licensed osteopathic physicians in Pennsylvania are duly "licensed physicians" and, as such, exempt from prohibitions of the anti-narcotic act of 1917.

But osteopathic physicians who prescribe drugs are liable to prosecution under the act of June 11, 1911, "making it a misdemeanor to practice medicine without a license," the court warned.

The high tribunal's decision upheld the Bucks County Quarter Sessions Court which had quashed an indictment against Dr. Theodore R. Cohen, of Morrisville, an osteopath. Dr. Cohen was charged with prescribing morphine sulphate, but demurred on grounds that the indictment described him as a "duly licensed physician."

In its appeal the Commonwealth asked whether the term "licensed osteopathic physician" is a "licensed physician" in the meaning of the narcotic law.

"The comparative merits of osteopathy and medicine as scientific systems for the treatment and cure of bodily disorders raises a controversial question in the public mind," said the majority decision written by Judge William E. Hirt.

"That question is not for us to attempt to discuss. For the purpose of this appeal it is enough to say that the legislature has seen fit to recognize osteopathy as a 'complete and independent scientific system' and the various acts of assembly have given the osteopaths the standing of physicians."

"The question was correctly decided by the court below. Licensed 'osteopathic physicians' and 'licensed physicians' and, as such, are exempted from prohibitions of the anti-narcotic act."

"If this defendant has exceeded the authority in him as an osteopath, as the information tends to indicate, and, by prescribing narcotics, has invaded the field of medicine, the indictment should have charged a violation of the act of June 3, 1911, making it a misdemeanor to practice medicine without a license."

In their dissenting opinions, Judges Chester H. Rhodes and Joseph Stadfield held that "an osteopath or osteopathic physician has no authority to prescribe narcotics. The demurrer to the indictment should have been overruled."

To Form Willkie Club
Here Some Time This Week

A "Willkie-For-President" club is to be formed in Bristol, it was reported here today when headquarters were being prepared at 225 Mill street.

The promoters of the movement stated that there has been a demand for a Willkie club here by the large number who are interested in promoting the candidacy of the Republican nominee for the Presidency.

It is believed that an organization will be perfected within the next few days and that from then on the members will become active in Wendell L. Willkie's behalf.

The movement now is just starting and has not assumed very definite proportions. Those who are active in the plans for organizing a Willkie club here state that they have received much favorable comment upon their proposal.

MEN'S RALLY SPEAKER
DIAGNOSES THE TIMES

"The Human Soul is Sick," is Verdict Given by Rev.
A. C. Walls

QUARTET, HULMEVILLE

HULMEVILLE, Oct. 9.—An inspirational service marked "Men's Night" of the 100th anniversary series in Ne-shaminy Methodist Church, last evening, when the Rev. Arthur C. Walls, pastor of Frankford Avenue Methodist Church, Philadelphia, delivered an address, and the Keystone Male Quartet of Philadelphia, sang.

The subject of the guest speaker, the Rev. Walls, was "The World Crises in the Human Race," and selections by the quartet included among other numbers: "God Bless America," "The Border Ballad," "Ole Man River," "Where My Caravan Has Rested," "When Day Is Done," "When Big Profundo Sang Low C," "I Am An American." The four have been singing together for 25 years, have with their pianist a collective service with the railroad by which they are employed or 178 years. The congregation, thrilled with the selections, was high in its praise of the singers.

"It's great to be a preacher or a layman in God's Church today, when there is a great work to be done" was one thought expressed by the Rev. Walls, who also reminded that "This is a time when a real man ought to be glad to be alive—to be alive in tough times."

Diagnosing the difficulty of the present era is that "the human soul is sick. Atmosphere today is shot through with selfishness and greed. . . . Let us not be complacent toward evil. God expects everyone of you to do your duty. And remember we aren't going to build our churches and make them great simply by doing more of the same thing that we used to do. We've got to do things differently in the future, men."

He urged the men of the church and community to "get out of the horse and buggy ways of running a church," adding: "Men, if you don't impress the young people by your vim and activity you'll be sorry 10,000 years in Glory that you didn't do it."

A TOTAL OF 401 ALIENS
HAVE REGISTERED HERE

Post Office Officials Believe
Only About 50% Have Complied With Law

TIME EXPIRES DEC. 26TH

A total of 401 aliens had registered at Bristol post office up to and including Monday, October 7th.

This, according to an estimate of postal officials here, is approximately 50 per cent of aliens in this area.

The work of fingerprinting and registering must be completed by December 26th, and failure of any alien to register in the allotted period, August 27th-December 26th, carries a penalty of one year imprisonment or $1,000 fine, or both.

The territory embraced in registration from Bristol post office extends from Andalusia to Tullytown; and from the Delaware River to South Langhorne.

Saturdays have been particularly busy days at the local post office, many being free from employment on that day.

Officials here urge that all who must register do so before Christmas week, when clerks are busy with the Christmas mail rush.

Where requested and needed on the part of institutions, clerks will be assigned to register aliens housed there-in. One such request has already been received from an institution in Cornwells Heights.

A Bristol milk-man thought he was seeing things the other morn at an early hour.

As he went about his task delivering milk, and likewise collecting empty milk bottles, he looked twice at one porch, in the spot where empties were usually found. Sure enough, there was an accumulation of beer bottles.

And the third look convinced the milk-man he was correct—so it must have been the house-holder who had been in some kind of a fog.

THERE hardly could be a more severe indictment of the head of a nation than that. Yet this charge is being made against Mr. Roosevelt. It has been made by various responsible men and a good many responsible newspapers. Moreover, what seems to be exceedingly con-

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

Politics In Defense

Washington, Oct. 8.

THE charge that the Administration is playing politics with the defense program is not one to be made lightly. It is hard to conceive of a more unworthy and ignominious thing for a President to do than to publicly preach patriotism and nonpartisanship to the people while underneath he needlessly wastes their money, and risks the national safety, for personal political reasons.

—O—

THERE hardly could be a more severe indictment of the head of a nation than that. Yet this charge is being made against Mr. Roosevelt. It has been made by various responsible men and a good many responsible newspapers. Moreover, what seems to be exceedingly convincing evidence has been presented and details given. Every posted observer in Washington knows that there is foundation for the charges, and only the completely glibly accept without qualification the soothing Presidential assurances that progress is being made and all is well.

—O—

THE truth is that the progress has been impeded by Administration politics and the whole program is confused and ineffectual, partly because of Mr. Roosevelt's refusal to delegate authority, but chiefly because it is impossible to separate it from his third-term candidacy. That fact is clearly revealed in the compromises that have been made, the result of which is to give the demands of supporting labor leaders preference over considerations of speed and cost in the awarding of contracts.

—O—

THE most glaring instance of this is in the recently established rule concerning the National Labor Relations Board and defense con-

JUST A FOUR-SOME

Enough is enough—not only for the Congress that pays the bills but also for the artist that does the sculpturing. The House of Representatives has refused to increase the Mount Rushmore Memorial appropriation to permit the addition of another face to the four already completed or in process of completion. The question was whether to include Franklin D. Roosevelt's countenance along with the massive features of Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt.

This carving up on the hills of South Dakota has been going on for thirteen years. Congress would like to see what the job looks like when finished, if ever. Besides, the annual bill ($86,000 for the coming year) although regarded as not even chicken feed in these times, is getting a little monotonous. But there are more pressing reasons. Gutzmom Borglum himself is opposed to further extension of the super-heroic stone-work. He points out that he is 67 years old now and doesn't expect to live forever. Most conclusive of all, there just isn't enough space on the mountain for a fifth figure.

The discussion has reminded Mr. Borglum of the early days in the history of the memorial. Original plans called for only three figures. It was Calvin Coolidge who insisted that Teddy Roosevelt should be given a place on the mountain. Since it was Coolidge who brought about Federal assistance for a project which had its origin among the farmers of South Dakota, his views deserved consideration.

Even without the addition of a fifth figure, the work yet to be done will take two years longer, at an estimated cost of about $1,500,000. So far Mr. Borglum has received only $120,000 for thirteen years of "sculpting"—but it has certainly been a steady job for an artist.

MAN SURRENDERS

Women have but recently come into the right of participating in public meetings and they have seized upon it with all the enthusiasm of beggars. They are today the great organizers, the makers of constitutions and by-laws, for garden clubs, church auxiliaries, sewing societies and other important bodies.

As is the way with people who meddle with parliamentary law, they not infrequently become involved in its meshes. What more natural than that they should appeal to their husbands to set them straight. Was it not man who framed Magna Charta the Bill of Rights, the American Constitution and dozens of other instruments of government?

Long ago the male of the species had his fling at constitutions and by-laws but for a number of years he has been finding the sporting page, radio and golf more intriguing. It is one traditionally masculine province man has gladly bequeathed to woman.

The lyric of a current hit song is so cute, there is talk of having it set to music.

"THE FORGOTTEN FLEET MYSTERY"

by Van Wyck Mason

SYNOPSIS

At the request of Geneva Benet, daughter of Captain Benet in charge of a fleet of obsolete vessels lying at anchor in the Chesapeake, Donald Colby, an ex-soldier, takes the job as watchman, despite the fact that three predecessors have mysteriously disappeared. As Colby, Geneva, and Dutton, another watchman, approach the "Monticello," on which the girl lives with her father, three shots and a scream rent the air. The captain is not aboard. Colby and Mears, watchman of the "Mount Vernon," find him in a cabin of that ship, dying from a bullet wound. Asked who shot him, the captain's eyes turn to the figure of a dead man sprawled on the staircase nearby. Suddenly, a sound issues from the passageway. Mears douses his flashlight. A figure appears and Colby tackles it. A jet of flame spews forth and in its light Colby is stunned to see the features of Geneva. Why was she on the "Mount Vernon" and why had she fired the automatic? The girl claims she thought he was "there," Colby snaps "Don't lie! You knew we were going to search the 'Mount Vernon'."

CHAPTER VII

Somewhat unsteadily, the girl pushed a strand of bobbed chestnut hair from across her eyes and not to her feet and stood looking at Donald Colby's grim figure. "What has happened?" Calmly enough, she switched on a flashlight of her own. Colby stepped aside, watching her closely. "I suppose since you have taken such pains you may as well see."

Once by him she halted and Colby saw her flashlight beam waver and drop until it encountered the gray white visage of Captain Benet—who, forgotten in the turmoil, still slumped, silently dying in the oak paneled passage.

"Oh, my God!" Geneva Benet gasped as people gasp when a bullet strikes them in a vital spot. "Connolly!" The tweed clad figure sped forward and knelt at the side of the stricken man. "Connolly! Have they hurt you very badly? Say that they haven't."

Connolly, indeed, Colby's features were leaner than ever when he stepped lightly back into the shadows and, poised somewhat like an old time gun fighter, studied the shadow ruled grand staircase beyond. Mears, strangely unemotional, kept his light fixed on the oddly assorted couple.

"Talk, please talk!" The girl pleaded in fearful earnestness. "Don't die, for God's sake, don't die. Who shot you—was it Colby?"

At that moment Captain Benet, who apparently had another name as well, must have died, for all at once his body went limp and rolled sideways, untidy bald head coming ugly to rest on the floor beside the horrified girl's knee. It seemed impossible that anybody could turn so pale as Geneva Benet and yet keep their senses.

"You did this," she flung at Colby in jerky, metallic accents. "I ought to have known—you'd be one of them!"

"You're crazy," Colby said, then added with acid brutality. "He's dead, so quit acting and get up—there's a lot to be done."

The girl raised a face blank save for bitter staring eyes. Colby might have spoken in Chinese for all the effect.

"You—you murdered him!" She shivered as though suddenly stripped bare.

"You made a neat job of getting me here," rasped the gaunt figure in the military tunic, "but now that I am here I'm going to run things. Get up!"

Geneva Benet stared emptily at him, then her eyes wandered vaguely to Mears just before she crumpled sideways.

"She's fainted," Mears grunted. He also said, "Oh!" because he found he was looking down the barrel of Colby's .32. "Hey, what's the idea?"

"Drop that gun. Pronto!"

"Who the deuce are you, anyhow?"

Mears, towering over the straight-backed ex-soldier, snarled and gathered himself.

"Drop that gun!" Staccato as a machine gun's report came Colby's command. The watchman's automatic clattered to the hardwood floor. "Okay, wise guy, okay," Mears snapped. "This ain't over yet." You gild the lily of obviousness," Colby remarked as he retrieved the other's weapon and then stood dominating the three prostrate figures. More Indian-like than ever, he jerked his head towards the man on the stair top.

"Go over and look at him."

The watchman obeyed.

"Know him?"

"No," came the sullen reply.

"Never laid eyes on the guy."

"Are you sure?"

Mears' lips revealed strong and prominent teeth in an unpleasant smile. "Prove that I have, Wise Guy."

as old as he had previously seemed. Next he gingerly opened the shirt front and narrowly inspected the two wounds, and as he did so his breath entered with a sharp hiss of surprise. One was ragged, much larger and different in shape from his precise little fellow.

Having completed a hurried inspection, Colby transferred his attention to the corpse of the unknown man. He was middle-aged, tall and thin with stiff iron gray hair and lay clutching a small Luger automatic pistol. A foot or so away a spent cartridge case winked like a tiny evil eye. The dead man wore a neat, gray serge suit which had recently gotten very dusty and marked with occasional streaks of rust. A bullet, planted squarely between the stranger's close set blue eyes did not by any means improve

"You did this," she flung at Colby in jerky metallic accents.

"How could he have got on board?"

"How would I know? Maybe you got a better idea yourself."

"You're sure you haven't seen him before?"

"No." But an indefinable instinct warned Colby to doubt the distinct "Pick up Miss Benet and take her to her quarters. When you return you'll get your gun back, so don't bother to hunt up another. All I want is to stay alive. See?"

Mears relaxed a little. "Okay. I'm holding him responsible for keeping her there," said this remarkable young man. "If he lets her out of his sight I'll beat the eternal tripe out of him."

Mears slightly gathered Geneva Benet's silent, long-legged figure into his arms and carried her out, with her bright loosened hair swaying over one jerseyed arm.

Had she really fainted or had he successfully thwarted a clever ruse? Colby had no time to ponder the question, irreplaceable seconds were ticking by and a nagging premonition of danger would not leave him.

Out of caution, he darted into the barber shop which opened onto B deck and watched Mears carry his burden across the gangplank to the Monticello. Then, and only then, did Colby wheel and, silent as a leopard on the prowl, dart back to the landing where Geneva Benet's abandoned flashlight still attempted to disperse the gloom.

First he hurriedly ransacked Captain Benet's pockets and in them found a large dagger knife and a watch marked D. Connolly. Also on this interesting old man's person he discovered a blackjack and a handful of .45 caliber bullets. Odd, since his death, the murdered man had shriveled into a creature twice his looks. A small, red-blue hole in the forehead seldom does.

"And now let's see what's on you, my lad," Colby muttered and, after sweeping the surroundings with his flashlight, rolled over the sagging corpse.

"So Mears didn't know who this was," he mused, "or said he didn't." Maintaining a sharp study of the landing and its surroundings, he rummaged hurriedly through the pockets, pocketed the contents and then gazed down into the dead man's sharp, strongly modeled features. It was neither a stupid nor an ugly face, but somehow vaguely sinister just the same. Two old scars, parallel to each other, and a nick off the top of the left ear afforded ideal items for identification.

"Um—must have been a university man," Colby reflected.

Boarding an interesting train of thought, he went quietly back into the dim and spacious smoking room to briefly cast his flashlight about. Ha! The gleam of metal caught his eye. Its origin proved to be a short crowbar—better known as a jimmy—and beside it lay a wood chisel. Had they been brought here to steal some lovely old panel or some handsomely carved mantel, or for what other purpose? It was that other purpose that bothered him.

Though he played his flashlight quickly on the mantelpiece and the paneling, he found nothing wrong, and a row of corvid nymphs grinned down at him almost derisively. What the devil had been going on? What, for instance, had Mears been doing just prior to the shots?

The Great Game of Politics

tracts. Prodded by his labor friends, Mr. Roosevelt took the initiative in formulating a policy that no firm which is "unfair" or a "violin" of the Wagner Labor Act shall receive any contract for defense work. His Attorney General, Mr. Robert H. Jackson, who seems able to produce supporting opinions "on order," produced one which, in effect, says that the NLRB shall be the sole judge as to whether a firm is a "violin." Thus the NLRB, which itself has been stamped by a House committee as an unfair and arbitrary agent of one labor faction—the CIO—has what amounts to an absolute veto over defense contracts.

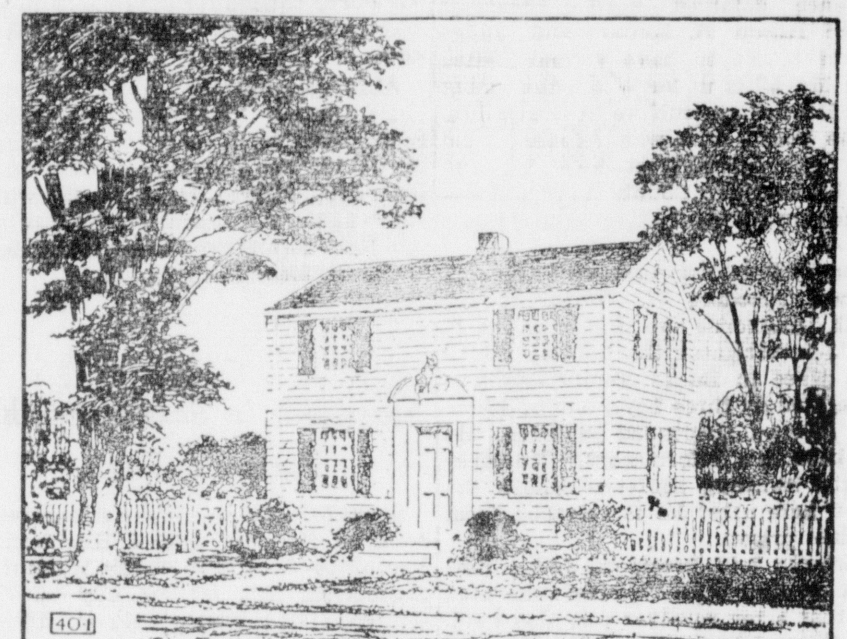

ALL the board has to do is denounce a firm as a "violin" of the Wagner law to prevent it from being given a contract. And it can interpret as a violation of the law any refusal of the firm to comply with board orders, no matter what they are. The firm might appeal to the courts, but until cleared it could not be given a contract. Obviously, the inevitable delay would make it impossible to wait. Nor has the Defense Commission any redress. It may want to award a contract to a firm because it can, at less cost and more speed, get better results than from any other. But, under Mrs. Jackson's opinion, it cannot award this contract because the NLRB, a concededly biased agency, says no.

WHEN to this situation is added the fact that the President apparently intends not to fill the vacancy on the NLRB created by the expiration of the term of its chairman, Mr. J. Warren Madden, until after the election, there appears no escape from the conclusion that politics is in the defense program and the non-political pose is a sham. Mr. Madden's term expired last August, but nearly six weeks have passed and no one has been named, although the board, without its chairman, is unable to function in a good many cases. The New York Times asks, "Why has the President failed to fill this vacancy?" To that there is just one answer: He does not fill this vacancy because he is running for a third term and it might affect his chances.

EVERY informed person knows that is true. No other explanation has been suggested. No other can be conceived. It is a clear case of politics, just as is the Jackson opinion. Yet the responsibility should not be put, as some shocked commentators have done, upon Mr. Jackson. Mr. Jackson does not render opinions like this on his own. Unquestionably, that opinion was rendered with the advice and approval of the President. And it is hard to understand the hesitancy of informed critics to say so. The political taint with which the defense work is being smeared ought to arouse deep public indignation. What makes it the more reprehensible is the pious pretense that the President has no thought of politics and is doing nothing to promote his third-term candidacy. Actually, he is running his campaign from the White House.

BUYING THIS HOME IS MORE ECONOMICAL THAN RENTING

HERE is an attractively arranged two-story, low cost house, designed after careful study to come within a cost price of $30.00 per month at F.H.A. rates. It is truly representative of planned economy.

Adequate facilities for comfortable living at low cost were the objectives of the architects in preparing this two bedroom, dining room, living room, kitchen and bath home. To attain these objectives and keep down expenses, they designed the house in the form of a rectangle, eliminating all unnecessary detail. A minimum of interior partitions also help make this structure an economy house.

Plans for this house are available at $1.00 each from National Small Homes Demonstration, Inc., 1337 Connecticut Avenue, Washington, D. C. Inquiries should refer to Plan 40-1.

Nothing to laugh at!

DAY AFTER DAY the headlines herald disaster, war and waste, the sickening story of a world gone mad...

And there are times when you feel you simply can't take any more bad news, must find some distraction...

Then turn inside your newspaper. In their accustomed places, you find your old friends—the funnies and adventure strips!

The War doesn't get into their strips, or their systems. They live their own lives, carry on their own adventures. They haven't changed.

They bring good news each day to take some of the sting off the real news, brighten our outlook, bring humor to salve the hurts of these harsh times.

Once the comics were supposed to be for children, but we know better now.

Henry Ford once inquired about the health of a comic character. Presidents of the United States have professed their comic favorites. Comic strips have been used in the pulp, established customs in the colleges. Blondie became a national character as well as a nickname. Popeye, popular in a score of countries and languages, in newspapers and films, is verboten in one country, but has three Air Force squadrons named after him in another. Some comic characters have larger followings than radio and movie stars. The great and near great, men and women, cheerfully admit their interest in these pen and ink identities... So you can read and enjoy them, openly and unashamed!

THE COMICS are only one of the good things in your newspaper. With news and information, there are pages of help, inspiration, and cheer, entertainment and diversion. You need your newspaper today not only for what it tells you, but for what it does for you.

Today, look over your favorite newspaper with an open eye and open mind, and realize how much the American newspaper offers the American people.

The newspaper is part of our national life and character, one of our national rights and privileges. And both the people who make the newspapers and the people who read and support them—must be vigilant to protect and preserve the newspaper as one of the most precious institutions of our time, and our country.

Today's Quiet Moment

(By Howard L. Zepp, Th. M.)

O God, make us realize that Thy gifts are never either static or final. Make us see that even Thy work in the salvation of our souls is purposive, conditional and dependent for its value on our acceptance, use and development. Help us to "work out our own salvation" and always be growing in grace and becoming, by our efforts and prayers, "strengthened with might by Thy Spirit in the inward man." Amen.

ON THE SCREENS

GRAND THEATRE

The real-life romance between a city boy and a small town girl comes into its own as a climatic highlight of "Dr. Christian Meets the Women," in which Jean Hersholt is starred, at the Grand Theatre today.

The romantic moments are shared by Frank Albertson and Marilyn Merrick. Heart-throbs enter Marilyn's small town life when Frank comes to River's End as press agent for a quack reducing specialist. To please Frank, Marilyn embraces the dietetic plan, which is not endorsed by Hersholt, as Dr. Christian, because it requires no medical supervision.

STRETCH DRIVE LOOMS IN SCHOOLBOY LOOP AS TEAMS ARE EVENLY BALANCED

Bensalem Now On Defense of Every School in League Who Will Show Determination To Knock Them From Position
As District's Best Eleven — Other Sport Gossip

(By JACK GILL)

Bensalem now reigns supreme over the field of schoolboy grid teams in the district by virtue of their well-earned 7 to 0 victory over Bristol. You've got to hand it to Coach Reimer and his boys; they are presenting a double-feature show with a smart, fast backfield and a steady-playing, hard-to-penetrate line.

Reimer has had a large hand in building Bensalem's football stock. Coming to the Cornwells Heights school from Sellersville-Perkasie, he had behind him an enviable collegiate career at Franklin and Marshall as a lightweight wrestler. In addition to his degree from the Pennsylvania college, he holds one from Columbia University.

A hard worker, peppery all the way through, he stresses fundamentals to the nth degree. Immediately after the game, when he lived ninety years in one quarter and added sixteen gray hairs to his already growing total, he handed this scribbled note to the writer:

To the Linemen:

The half may punt for fifty
And the full may buck for five
The quarter's the brains of every team
And he keeps the team alive
But when the tiers are rent with cheers
And the air's like a nip of wine Here's to the souls who open the holes
Down in the muck of the line.

Every Bensalem backfield candidate must memorize that little piece before he can carry the ball for the Owls. This is another of Reimer's attitude schemes. It always leaves the back with the impression that all is not him in this game of football.

Of course, the game Saturday didn't see any too much stalwart offensive blocking on the part of either team. Where the triumphant squad shone was on a couple of game saving goal line stands. "Down in the muck of that line" Saturday many a big Bensalem boy winced at the slants of Peterpaul. Many a shin was cracked and many a brush burn gored its way into the skin.

It is still said by the Monday Morning Quarterback Association, which, by the way, becomes more rent with the losers wall each week, that the game was one of mental attitude. The fans expected Bristol to be on the rebound, but it was evident that alertness in all departments was to eventually be the winning factor.

The folly of passing so often with a seven-point lead was discussed, and Bensalem did it chiefly because Bristol continued to throw eight men up front in an effort to block kicks. This left a meagre pass defense.

As for Head Coach Tom Camplion, the mental picture was one of headache qualities all week. He preached overconfidence in the locker room and at the high school pep rally assembly.

But Bristol cannot come up with a play when they are knocking on the door. Between puffs and snorts of brilliance, still very much in evidence between the ten yard lines, they show nothing much when the occasion presents itself. There are still only eleven men opposing them down on the ten yard line, but they have little territory to defend. It's easy for a big dog to defend a little yard-tough to keep guys from running all over a big one.

The breaks still aren't on the Cardinals side. Offside when Peterpaul, the mound, skirted end for a touch-down, the play was nullified. On another occasion, a pass was badly bungled over the goal line that would have made the final outcome taste better to George, the victory starved Hunny.

Morrisville, it is said, looked none too impressive in eking out a one touchdown 7 to 0 triumph of the New Jersey School for the Deaf. Bud McAllister climaxed a sustained 80 yard drive by going over in the second period. Newtown, as expected, lost to Bryn Athyn by a 14 to 0 tally. Langhorne, inactive as far as major competition went, defeated Trenton Reserves, 6 to 0, in a scrimmage.

Outstanding in the week's schoolboy news was the league meeting held at Langhorne High School, during which the conference grid rating system came up for lengthy discussion once again.

It was unanimously agreed that the Dickinson program could not be employed again if Newtown did not meet every league team. Thus, a hurried arrangement may be made to schedule the Indians with Bristol.

If an agreement cannot be reached, the same system as the Bux-Mont uses, two points for a win and one for a tie, might be put into effect.

Morrisville High School, after years and years of trying, finally dropped baseball from its athletic curriculum. Most of the talk, however, centered around the topic of the times, football.

Games this week pit the locals against Conshohocken in an away tussle. A district fray of major importance will find Morrisville playing host to Burlington. Bensalem has more fear of Newtown, whom they will meet Saturday, than the majority of fans can believe possible.

"Popularity Election" Opens Here Today

And they are yours for the asking. Vote them for your favorite entry by either giving them to the parents of the child or by dropping them in the ballot box at the contest headquarters at 120 Wood street.

Many children are expected to enter this Popularity Election within the next few days and right now is the best time to enter your youngster, in order to give him (or her) a fair chance to win one of the 17 cash awards.

When shopping at a store giving "Junior Popularity" votes on cash purchases do not hesitate to ask for them. The business men behind this promotional movement who are listed on page one of this issue are as interested as anyone else to see this novel contest a large success, and they will gladly give the vote coupon on request.

The winners will be the children having the greatest number of votes at the close of the contest on December 2nd, either in the form of "Junior Popularity Votes" or in vote credits given on subscriptions to The Bristol Courier. Parents, relatives, neighbors and friends will be responsible for the progress made by the various children during the contest, depending upon the amount of business they do with the co-operating merchants.

From now until the end of the first period on November 9th, the vote value of "Junior Popularity Votes" is greater than at any other time in the contest. Likewise, the vote value on Courier subscriptions is greater than at any other period.

It is permissible to cast votes for any baby not already entered, provided the name, age, and name and address of the parents are written on the votes, and that an entry blank accompanies the first votes.

ST. LOUIS YOUNGSTER TO MEET GARIBALDI

TRENTON, N. J., Oct. 9 — Warren Bockwinkle, popular St. Louis youngster, who makes a specialty of pinning the bad boys of the mat, will attempt to dispose of another at the Trenton Arena tonight when he meets Gino Garibaldi in the feature of five wrestling bouts.

At the end of last season, Bock won the plaudits of the fans when he downed the Golden Terror, who wrestles without the benefit of the rule-book. Already this season, Warren has won over Chief Chewacki and Lou Plummer, two dangerous mat villains.

"Bock's" victory streak will be in real danger against the veteran Garibaldi. Several weeks ago, Gino defeated Danne O'Mahoney, giving that young Irishman and former world's champion, his only loss here.

The semi-windup will bring together two boys who ought to keep the front row citizens busy—Tiger Tasker, the bewhiskered Alaskan, and Henry Kulkevich, the stream-lined Pole. Both are ace rough-house grapplers.

Babe Zaharias, burly member of the Colorado mat family, will meet Sheriff Tom Hanley, 290-pound southerner, and Pietro Marconi, classy Italian, will face Joe Maynard, Chicago toughie.

Pat Rooney, reputedly clever young Irish newcomer, will make his debut of the "Junior Popularity Election" will be the publishing of photos. Every entered youngster will have his or her photograph appear in the columns of The Courier one or more times during the contest period.

However, the parents' first step is to enter the baby. An entry blank worth 5,000 credits can be found on page three of this issue. Clip this blank and bring or mail it to contest headquarters at 120 Wood street. If the parents have a good recent photograph of the baby, it should accompany the entry blank. If not, The "Popularity Election" manager will make an appointment with the official contest photographer to have a picture made without charge to the parents.

Dozens of your friends and relatives are shopping daily in the stores issuing "Junior Popularity Votes." All you have to do is request your friends to ask the merchants for coupons and save them for your child.

Men's Rally Speaker Diagnoses The Times

abroad in the world—the spirit of anti-Christ was impressed on his hearers, the speaker then pleading "Give the Church of Jesus Christ a chance to build character into your lives." He deplored the lack of deep-founded bed-rock convictions; and he mentioned the need of faith to help fight the battle of life and to make good in the spirit of brotherhood.

The breaking down of old beliefs, and disintegration of the family life was given profound consideration on the part of the clergyman, who told how people are not only losing faith in their fellow-man, and their country, but also in religion. "Unless we believe in God we have nothing to hang to or to guard us . . . The man who has no regard for the Church of Jesus Christ to attend it on the Sabbath day is not a true American."

After reminding that America was founded for "freedom to worship God, and that alone which made America great," the Rev. Walls told how false idea of freedom has spread, the idea of freedom to do as one pleases. "So we find here and throughout the world many types, each demanding protection of their rights and privileges, others demanding rights and privileges—and all forgetting their rights and duties toward God. We have today the most irresponsible group we've ever had in America. We're in a mania of demanding rights, and ignoring responsibilities. Every right we have in America has been bought at a great price. But the trouble is today that people are demanding rights without sacrifice. They want them on a silver platter. And if we aren't careful we will lose our rights."
